P.A.C.E – A Daniel Hughes Approach

Children who have experienced early life trauma can form a mistrust of the world and the people around them - this is described as the child developing Blocked Trust. For caregivers, it can be intensely painful and personally challenging to care for a child who rejects your attempts to care, love and connect with them. Over time, you may feel like a failure, feel scared of and/or angry with the child. This is a very real and normal response to a very stressful relational dynamic – and you may be experiencing Blocked Care.

PACE (Playfulness, Acceptance, Curiosity, Empathy) is an approach developed by Dr Daniel Hughes – which is a way in which adults think, feel, communicate and behave to help children feel safe within relationships.

For adults, using PACE can help reduce conflict, defensiveness and withdrawal that tends to be present in the lives of troubled children. Using PACE helps the adult to see the strengths and positive features that lie underneath more negative and challenging behaviour. Children can then begin to learn to relax and trust in their caregivers and other relationships.

Talking about Racism

NEW

Racism happens in lots of different ways, every day and it's never ok. Racial discrimination affects mental health and leads to inequalities in everyday life. Experiencing racism can be distressing and traumatic.

It's essential that we think about how we talk to young people about race, identity and racism, keeping in mind it's not a one-off conversation. It's essential that racism is acknowledged, and that there is a comfortable environment to talk about everything openly. What is the right thing to say? Will your foster child even understand what you're talking about? It's important that we get the message across in the right way.

This webinar will offer an opportunity to learn about addressing racism in a meaningful way, how to be an ally and face your own biases and stereotypes.
